POLITICAL SCIENCE

Political Science, broadly defined, is the study of political power and the ends to which that power is used. It is “political” in the sense that it concentrates on the institutions and processes of political systems that exercise power in an authoritative way. It is “scientific” in the sense that there is a systematic body of knowledge about political behavior which can be studied empirically, normatively, and experientially. But in a broader sense, political science also studies the larger issues of justice and the ways in which the use of political power advances or retards the achievement of justice.

Politics deals with “who gets what,” and political science is the study of that process of getting and maintaining power. It is an attempt to define and analyze the processes by which individuals define their interests and interact to promote those interests. At the same time it is the study of the moral ends to which power is used. The six officially defined areas of specialty within the Bachelor of Arts in Political Science are: American Politics, Political Theory, Public Policy, Comparative Politics, International Relations, and Research Methodology.

The Bachelor of Arts in Political Science prepares students for possible careers in public administration; federal, state, and local elected office; public policy analysis; lobbying, journalism, political consulting, law, and graduate work leading to teaching, research, or administration at the university level.

POL 390B  Topics in Political Science  3 Credit Hours
TOPIC: Fououndations of the American Experience The course considers a body of readings that have proved highly influential to American political, philosophical, and scientific thought. Beginning with ancient philosophies and religions, early scientific theories, and the classical philosophies of Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoics, the course concludes with the scientific, social, and political revolutions of the 17th and 18th century. The course argues that through the historical examination of philosophical and scientific "giants", a better understanding and appreciation of the modern-day American experience can be gained.

POL 390J  Topics in Political Science  3 Credit Hours
Topic: Freedom of Religion in America. This course is designed to explore a variety of historical and contemporary issues dealing with freedom of religion as guaranteed in the First Amendment of the Bill of Rights. Special attention will be given to the landmark decisions of the Supreme Court interpreting the Establishment and Free Exercise clauses of the First Amendment and the legal and political controversies raised by these decisions. The course is designed to lead to a greater understanding of the symbiotic relationship between religion and politics, the importance of religious liberty to democracy, and the inevitable tensions between religious groups, and between church and state in a free society.

This course explores the intersection of science, technology, and public policy. Scientific knowledge and technological innovations are exceptionally powerful resources for policy-makers and for societies; they also pose great challenges and risks. This course will look at how science and technology affect the pursuit of policy goals in areas such as public health, environmental sustainability, economic growth, and national security. Students will not receive credit for more than one of POL 460, POL 560, and PPOL 560.

Restriction(s):

The United States responded to the events of September 11, 2001 with a series of unprecedented action under the umbrella of homeland security and the War on Terror. This course examines American National security policy by asking a few key questions: What is terrorism and how does it threaten the United States? How has the United States responded to the threat of terrorism over time? What have the consequences of US policy been to date? Finally, how would we balance a desire for security with our desire for civil liberties and ethical action?
